UC eNGAGE updates from several attendees of the October 24th summit

President Napolitano sponsored the summit, the focus of which was engaging students using technology. A lot of online universities were represented.

Gary Small from the Brain Research Institute at UCLA did opening session. He spoke about how the thought environment is changing, i.e. it's a both/and world vs. an either /or world.

Online teaching is making its way to the forefront – it's no longer a different discipline. The primary means of communication to engage students is predominantly text and chat (not email). Gamification is starting to be a learning tool.

Universities are also using online data to identify at-risk students and pulling data from different sources to see how students use services online.
